WANTED

CAPLIN.

But Capt. McEachern Would
Not Sell to French.

WAS OFFERED $50 A DORYLOAD.

Some of Crew Finely Treated on Hospital Ship.

Capt. Alex. McEachern of sch. Maggie and May, which arrived yesterday from Grand Bank with the largest salt cod fare of the season, brings an interesting story of the French fishing fleet and how poorly they have done this season.

Sch. Maggie and May was at St. Pierre, Miquelon, for bait in the early part of June, and at the same time, all seeking bait, were 350 sail of French Grand Bankers. Two of the vessels were of 700 tons each and carried 50 men and 20 dories each. Both crafts, also, had their own doctors. Some of the vessels were of 500 tons and carried 12 dories and there were over 300 crafts from 40 to 120 tons.

A French man-of-war and the hospital ship were also there at the time. Some of Capt. McEachern's crew were suffering greatly from very sore hands, and the physicians of the hospital ship readily treated them, using them splendidly, doing their hands much good, and magnanimously refused to take any compensation. One of the officers of the man-of-war visited Capt. McEachern on the Maggie and May, making a pleasant call and tendering his assistance if it should be needed.

On June 8 the Maggie and May went to Deusick, N. F., secured a baiting of caplin, and went to the Grand Banks, working to the westward as the baiting was used up, reaching St. Pierre again on June 28. Many of the vessels were still there waiting for the caplin, which had not struck at Miquelon, although many of the large crafts had gone out without any bait, hoping to get squid on the banks. So scarce was caplin at St. Pierre that 60 francs was paid for a hog's head.

Sch. Maggie and May went to Deusick and took five dory loads for a few finishing up sets off Scatteri. As the vessel left St. Pierre for Deusick, a big French vessel owner sent one of his skippers to Capt. McEachern and offered him $50 a dory load if he would get him some caplin.

It is perhaps needless to say that Capt. McEachern refused to do this, as he has many firm friends at Newfoundland, where he is always used well, and he would not violate Newfoundland laws by selling bait to the French.

Capt. McEachern says that fish have never been as scarce on the bank as this year, and that the French fleet has done almost nothing. Many large vessels have been at St. Pierre for a long time, waiting for loads of dry fish.

FINE SPECIMEN OF WHALE.

St. Johns, July 16.—The American scientists who were at Balemate to make a plaster cast of a whale for the National museum at Washington have returned here in the steamer Glencoe, having had the fullest success in their mission. They secured a splendid bull fish, 78 feet long and weighing about 70 tons. They made a cast of this and then, after stripping off the flesh, cleaned the skeleton and brought it with them.

ELECTOR

IN AGAIN.

Capt. Clayton Morrissey Has Another Big Fare.

HAILS FOR 270,000 POUNDS.

Remarkable Record for This
Hustling Young Skipper.

Sch. Elector, Capt. Clayton Morrissey, arrived from the Grand Bank this morning with her second salt cod fare of the season.

During the latter part of April, Capt. Morrissey astonished all hands by arriving home with a big fare of 260,000 pounds of salt cod. This was not only exceptionally early for a bank trip, but was also the largest salt cod fare ever landed in April.

The Elector sailed on her second trip early in May, and is now home again this time with another big fare. Between 270,000 and 275,000 pounds of salt cod, Capt. Morrissey calls them, and he always has what he hails for.

To land two big bank fares in a season is generally considered good work, but it is now only the middle of July and Capt. Morrissey has two big fares to his credit and plenty of time to get another trip, which he will no doubt do.

On this trip, Capt. Morrissey fished on three herring and two caplin baitings, catching his fare in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and on Grand Bank.

As prices are high, a big stock will be the result of this fare. As matters now stand, Capt. Morrissey has a fine chance to break all salt bank records for stock and amount of fish landed in one season.
